"Merely Mary Ann" Coming to the Star

"Of all the parts that I have played, which do I like best?" repeated dainty Vivian Martin, star of the William Fox production, "Merely Mary Ann." "I like the part of Mary Ann, the slavey in Israel Zangwill's famous stage masterpiece."

The answer came quick as a flash. There was no hesitancy on the part of this demure photoplay star, no evasion. In her voice was a tone that carried conviction. The question was answered as soon as asked.

"The part of Mary Ann is my favorite of favorites," continued Miss Martin. "I like it because I liked the real Mary Ann, for there was a real Mary Ann. You didn't know? Oh, yes, indeed, there was a very, very real Mary Ann." Miss Martin's face became unduly sober. "I must tell you about her."

"Mary Ann—the real one—lived in the little town from which I came. She had all the qualities which have endeared Mr. Zangwill's Mary Ann to countless thousands. She was reared in moderate circumstances and, when upon the oath of her parents, she was thrown on the charity of neighbors, she found her lot humiliating, though why she should was inexplicable, for whatever her mother's friends did for her had not the least guise of charity."

"Mary Ann eventually tired of the small town and went to New York. We corresponded with her for a little while and then her letters ceased. Nothing was heard of her for several years and then one day our local postmaster read in a New York paper that 'Mary Ann' had thrown herself under a New York elevated train. The headline read 'City Once More Exact Its Toll.' The story was very brief, not over ten or twelve lines. It told, however, of the finding of a note in which Mary Ann heart-breakingly explained the reason for her act."

"To our minds, we of Mary Ann's small home town, there was something brutal in the meager, matter-of-fact announcement of her death. The item was tucked away in a remote corner of the paper as though the editor regarded it of trivial importance. To us it was of overwhelming concern. Not even when I read of the Lusitania and Titanic disasters with all their loss of life, was I so shocked as when the village postmaster handed me that clipping that told of the tragic death of our Mary Ann. I have never forgotten her."

"Now, perhaps, you will understand my reason for liking the part. Happily, Mr. Zangwill's Mary Ann, comes to no dire end. She is tempted, but there is always some protecting influence watching over her. How I wish that some person in the big city had exerted a protecting influence over our Mary Ann, the real one, who has gone."

"Merely Mary Ann" will be shown at the Star Theatre Sunday.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The most highly appreciated gift is the portrait of one near and dear. The truth of this statement is so evident that you will very probably admit it yourself.

The most economical investment for the season is a dozen photographs of yourself, of the baby or of the family group; the same money cannot buy more satisfaction and pleasure to so many.

Conditions governing the cost of living and conducting business are such that there must be an universal readjustment of values, upward.

On the first of the New Year photographs must go up ten to twenty-five percent.

Make an early appointment, save the necessary increase of cost, and pleasingly perpetuate the memory of yourself among your friends.

A premium with each order over $5.00 during November, so that the rush will not be at the last moment.

AND REMEMBER

Your friends can buy anything you can give them—except your photograph.
